PREET BHARARA LAUNCHES PODCAST

I Preet Bharara, the former U.S. Attorney in Manhattan who became a scourge of Wall Street wrongdoers before President Donald Trump fired him in March, will soon have a new outlet to voice his criticism of the White House: a podcast. He is launching the weekly show "Stay Tuned with Preet," in partnership with WNYC Studios. The podcast will be produced by Some Spider Studios, a media company owned by Bharara's brother, Vinit, where Preet became an executive vice president earlier this year. The podcast's title is a nod to one of Bharara's favorite responses when he was asked at news conferences about ongoing investigations. Bharara "will offer commentary on our judicial, political and cultural systems," according to a release from Cafe, Some Spider's news and entertainment website.

TILLERSON: US CAN TALK TO N. KOREA IF TESTS STOP

2 Secretary of State Rex Tillerson held a door open for dialogue with North Korea on Monday, saying Washington was willing to talk to Pyongyang if it halted a series of recent missile test launches. Tillerson's comments, made at a regional security forum in Manila, were the latest U.S. attempt to rein in Pyongyang's nuclear and missile program after months of tough talk from President Donald Trump. The U.N. Security Council on Saturday imposed its toughest round of sanctions yet against Pyongyang over its two intercontinental ballistic missile tests in July. But Tillerson appeared more conciliatory on Monday.

SWIFT WATCHES JURY SELECTION FOR TRIAL

4 Taylor Swift sat next to her lawyers at a federal courthouse in Denver as jury selection began for a trial pitting the pop star against a Colorado radio personality over allegations the former DJ fondled her four years ago during a photo shoot. Swift, 27, one of the top-selling U.S. singers, wore a black jacket and white top in court as she watched the proceedings. She is expected to take the stand during the trial in U.S. District Court to testify about the incident, which resulted in broadcaster David Mueller's firing from Colorado music station KYGO-FM. The litigation centers on Swift's allegations that Mueller slipped his hand under her dress and grabbed her bare bottom as they posed during a meet-and-greet session before her June 2, 2013, concert in Denver.

NETFLIX BUYS COMIC BOOK PUBLISHER

5 Video streaming company Netflix Inc. said on Monday it bought comic book publisher Millarworld, home to titles such as "Kick-Ass" and "Kingsman," in its first ever acquisition. Millarworld, run by Scottish writer Mark Millar with his wife Lucy, will give Netflix a host of character franchises with which to develop films, TV series and children's shows. Millarworld has developed three of its franchises — "Wanted," "Kick-Ass" and "Kingsman" — into films that have garnered nearly $1 billion in the global box office. The deal comes as Netflix spends billions of dollars on content to win new subscribers in a quest to become the world's top movie and TV streaming service. The company did not disclose the terms of the acquisition.

All Mass. Pike Allston lanes are reopened ahead of schedule

The Massachusetts Turnpike saw lane closures during the Commonwealth Avenue Bridge Project, but now all lanes on I-90 are open.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

If you take the Massachusetts Turnpike, your morning commute should be back to normal as of Monday morning.

All four lanes in each direction on I-90 are open once again, as of 5 a.m. Monday, Aug. 7, according to the Massachusetts Department of Transportation.

The Pike was previously whittled down to less lanes because of the Commonwealth Avenue Bridge construction. Now, the lane restoration has been completed three weeks ahead of schedule, officials said.

"The hard work of our crews and contractors is allowing us to meet this important milestone ahead of schedule and open all four lanes in each direction on I-90 in Boston in time for the Monday morning commute," Transportation Secretary Stephanie Pollack said in a statement.

To accommodate the construction project, I-90 was reduced to three lanes in each direction beginning July 7, then further reduced to one or two lanes of travel beginning July 28.

The turnpike was scheduled to be fully reopened to all four lanes by Aug. 28. It's fully restored early, officials said, because workers were able to finish installing beams and remove a 440-pound crane on I-90 "more efficiently than originally planned," said Acting Highway Administrator Jonathan Gulliver.

Lane reductions on the turnpike throughout the duration of the project will now be reserved for off-peak hours and short-term durations as needed.

The transportation changes for the rest of the options impacted by the project are unchanged. Interruptions along Commonwealth Avenue as well as the MBTA Green Line B Branch and bus routes are expected to continue until Aug. 14 as planned.

"Our team has designed this major construction project in a way that considers the needs of the traveling public, as well as residents of the Greater Boston area, and we are pleased with the progress of work so far," Pollack said. "We appreciate the continued support and patience of the traveling public and will continue to conduct our operations in ways that seek to minimize our impact on the local community and all those who travel throughout the Commonwealth Avenue/Boston University region in Boston."

Members of the public can check transit schedule information and learn about the shuttle buses replacing the B Line service at mbta.com and MassDOT's appGoTime, which has real-time travel information.

Families of slain doctors file lawsuit alleging inadequate building security

The lawsuit targets the condo building as well as the company that provides security services, where the man charged with the homicides once worked.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

The families of the two doctors who were murdered in their South Boston home in May have filed a wrongful death lawsuit.

Lina Bolanos and Richard Field were found with their hands bound and throats slashed at their luxury South Boston condo in May.

Bampumim Teixeira, a 30-year-old man from Chelsea, was charged with their murders and recently ordered held without bail.

Teixeira has two larceny convictions on his record from 2014 and 2015, according to the Suffolk County District Attorney's office. He was released from prison after serving nine months a short time before this incident.

Officials believe the doctors let Teixeira into their home, which was located with the Macallen Building, as he once worked at the condo building as part of its concierge and security services.

Palladion Services, the company that provides concierge and security workers to the Macallen, said after the incident that it hired Teixeira in October 2015 "after we performed background and reference checks, which were clean."

Now, the families of Bolanos and Field have filed a lawsuit against the trust that owns the building, the building's management and security companies and the company that formerly provided security and enployed Teixeira, according to the Boston Globe.

The wrongful-death lawsuit alleges that "a 'veneer' of security" allowed Teixeira to enter the doctors' home and that Palladion Services never informed the building's management company that Teixeira was a convicted bank robber.

The complaint also alleges that a security guard working at the front desk when the murders occurred "took about 20 minutes to call 911 after receiving a call about a gunman in the doctors' condo," the Globe reports.

"Despite the appearance of operating a secure property, in fact, the defendants provided virtually no security for its residents whatsoever."

A statement from the families' attorneys

"Despite the appearance of operating a secure property, in fact, the defendants provided virtually no security for its residents whatsoever," the attorneys stated in the complaint, per the Globe. "For example, one can enter the garage with ease by simply walking from the street when the garage door is opened by a resident who is either entering or leaving the building's garage in their vehicle."

The Macallen Building bills itself as "one of Boston's most luxurious, amenity filled, loft-style luxury properties," with two-bedroom units selling for upward of $1 million.

Anna Faris and Chris Pratt are dunzo

Anna Faris and Chris Pratt announced late Sunday night — while everyone was distracted by “Game of Thrones” — that they are separating. The very PDA-heavy couple have been married for eight entire years and share a 4-year-old son, Jack.

Faris took to Instagram, choosing to use the Messages app over the Notes app, to announce the split.

“We are sad to announce we are legally separating,” she wrote. “We tried hard for a long time, and we’re really disappointed. ... We still love each other and will always cherish our time together.” Same old, same old, am I right?

Pratt co-signed via Facebook, saying literally the exact same thing. Which begs the question: Why are celebrities even using Facebook for this kind of stuff?

These two really seemed like the perfect couple. It’s just a heavy reminder that A. looks can be deceiving and B. actors can be deceiving. I mean, it’s their dang job!

Aaron Carter and his GF broke up, too!

Man, oh man. Break-ups sure are today’s trend: Aaron Carter has reportedly split from his girlfriend, Madison Parker. The news comes just a day after he came out as bisexual on his Twitter.

The two began dating last year, and a source tells Us Weekly that the breakup is one of those amicable ones. “Aaron is continuing to focus on his personal self with regards to his truth, health and music.” Aw, his truth!

Carter, 29, thanked his fans for their support with a shirtless selfie that showcases his array of questionable tattoos.

“Goodnight world. Your #Love and support means everything to me. I adore all my fans. Never forget that.”

That’s not how you spell love, but I forgive you.

News of the split broke hours after Carter took to Twitter to admit that he is attracted to both women and men.

May Carter continue to live his truth. Bless up, my dude. Bless up.

Oh, and Elon Musk & Amber Heard? Done too.

Elon Musk — inventor, rich dude — and Amber Heard — the lady who ruined “Magic Mike,” never forget — are done, probably. Allow me to explain.

A source tells Us Weekly that ultimately, it just came down to timing. Doesn’t it always? “He’s superbusy and works all the time. Amber is filming [“Aquaman”] in Australia until October. She’s in no position to settle with him. She feels her career is just starting.”

Musk had apparently been wooing Heard for a long, long time, to no avail. But she eventually gave in, probably sometime after he “got her a Tesla.” Girl, I don’t blame you.

Anyway, you know what they say about rebounds, kids. I mean, “they,” say nothing. But if I were “they,” I’d say something about how they’re bound to never last. Get it?

‘Life of Kylie’ is not great

I’m not saying that we here at Metro are fans of Kylie Jenner but — oh, forget it. I’m lukewarm on her. I wish her no ill will. Would I love to no longer be confronted with her visage at every turn on the World Wide Webs? Absolutely. But it doesn’t look like that’s happening any time soon.

Especially with her new show, “Life of Kylie,” having premiered late Sunday night.

The show is supposed to show the 19-year-old at her realest. But from what it sounds like, her “realest” is pretty dang fake. Complex calls it “contrived and formulaic.” Marie Claire says it’s “a contradiction.” Over at Vanity Fair, they’re imagining that “Sofia Coppola [could be] intrigued by the plot line of Kylie Jenner’s life,” which is both a shade and tribute to “Bling Ring.”

So, it’s probably more fun to read reviews of “Life of Kylie” than actually watch “Life of Kylie.”

Our favorite moments from 'Wet Hot American Summer: 10 Years Later'

Netflix's Camp Firewood reunion delivers.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

The Camp Firewood gang is together again. In Netflix's eight-part series, the crew reconvenes at camp ten years later, just like they planned in "Wet Hot American Summer" the movie. Now it's 1991, they're in their mid twenties, with careers, kids, dreams and romantic entanglements, which they've (mostly) put aside to fully indulge in this blast from the past.

It's a complicated time for our grown-up camp counselors and a lot goes down in one weekend. Here are our favorite moments from the return trip. Walla Walla hey! Spoilers below.

Victor finally losing his V card
The jheri-curled boy-who-cried-sex finally does the deed and it's ... so bizarre. Yes, Victor (Ken Marino) really does get some, but it's not what you'd have ever expected: He's propositioned by Donna (Lake Bell) to impregnate her, because her now husband Yaron (David Wain) doesn't have the goods. But on their night of coitus, both Donna and Yaron participate, masked, in what feels like a tripped out, unhinged version of the ceremony in "The Handmaid's Tale." It is maybe the most hilarious scene in the show.

Alyssa Milano playing a bad nanny
McKinley (Michael Ian Black) and Ben (played this time not by Bradley Cooper, but Adam Scott) are now married with a baby, but there's something not quite right about the nanny. Renata (Alyssa Milano) seems like a responsible sitter, but there's a "Mom-mie Dearest" vibe and McKinley's obsession with getting to the bottom of it is one of the more absurd and thoroughly enjoyable subplots of the series.

Andy meeting his match
Paul Rudd's Andy might have grunged out with long hair, a goatee and a leather jacket, but other than that he's the same horny, crude jackass we remember.

Back at camp this time, he meets his rival, a teen camper named Deegs (Skyler Gisondo), whose jerk-off behavior hits too close to home for Andy. The two finally decide to face off to see who's "King of Camp."

and watching the man child and actual child trade barbs, battle guitar ballads and compete in "dizzy bats" is too perfect.

Coop finally finding true love

Our dude Coop (Michael Showalter) has never been lucky in love. This time around he gets pretty close with long-time camp crush Katie (Marguerite Moreau), who kisses him and declares her feelings, but ends up being just a tease, per usual — even though the infidelity leads his fiancée to break up with him. But when Coop returns to real life post-reunion with the missing ending to his memoir, his agent (played by Melanie Lynskey) is smitten and the two decide to make a go of it. Get it, fat Coop!

This scene could not have lasted more than 30 seconds, but, oh my.

The best TV series of this summer

"The Bachelorette" has exceeded expectations, thanks to star Rachel Lindsay. ABC

"Insecure" is at the top of its game. HBO

So far, so so good.

RACHAEL VAUGHAN
CLEMMONS
@rachaelclemz
rachael.clemmons@metro.us

It's August already. The summer is nearly over, so why not pay tribute to some of this year's best television? Here we have the five best series of the summer. And if you haven't watched already, you're missing out.

"Insecure"
This season of "Insecure" is an improvement on the first — which was already delightfully funny. This year, the series is funnier and more raw, bringing a fresh take to Issa's comings and goings, and exploring the little seen lives of other characters, including the very beautiful, very lost Lawrence (Jay Ellis). The sophomore season also manages to show new and old relationships as they truly are, featuring sex and sexuality in all of its sexy, and often awkward, glory.

"Game of Thrones"
There's no time to waste — winter is here, and as a result? This season of "Game of Thrones" has done away with its famously slow pacing, trading it instead for chilling precision. That's right: The last six seasons of building tension are paying off. Finally, we get to see far off characters interact with each other — Daenerys and Jon's long waited for meeting; and Cersei's final revenge on Ellaria come to mind. And with the final episode premiering in a few short weeks, there's no telling what the future may hold.

"GLOW"
Alison Brie was clearly very stoked about her first leading role in Netflix's "GLOW." And that excitement translates into her infectious performance as Ruth, a struggling actress in 1980s Los Angeles. An enjoyable, discerning romp through the decade of big hair, "GLOW" manages to be funny and serious at the same time, tackling feminism, fidelity and determination in equal turns. Oh, and there's the whole thing where a group of misfit women come together to learn the glorious art of wrestling. A must watch.

"The Bachelorette"
Hear us out: We didn't have high expectations for the 13th season of "The Bachelorette," first black bachelorette notwithstanding. And even though there were obvious racial machinations behind the scenes — just look at the very obvious very strung out feud between Kenny and Lee — Rachel Lindsay's season is the closest the franchise has ever gotten to being self-aware.

Somehow, Lindsay's season has been an subtly eye opening foray into interracial dating, and the struggles of personhood when dating while black. Many of the bachelors admit to never having dated a black woman, and Lindsay admitted before the premiere that race didn't play a factor into the decision she made. At time we were skeptical. But witnessing her journey, and seeing Lindsay struggle with the loaded expectations piled on her has been a fascinating ride.

"The Handmaid's Tale"

What summer television round up in its right mind would dismiss the genius of "The Handmaid's Tale"? Putting Margaret Atwood's dystopian thriller in modern times is both a necessary and awfully terrifying effort — oftentimes, "The Handmaid's Tale" hits too close to home. And with stellar performances from Elisabeth Moss, Samira Wiley and Alexis Bledel, the series is as powerful as it is disturbing. Bonus points for having the internet's newest boyfriend, Max Minghella, starring as the dreamy, inscrutable Nick.

Erin Gore is making cannabis a women's lifestyle product

The Garden Society is part of the new wave of brands exploring how medical marijuana can be used for health and wellness.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metrc.us

When Erin Gore first turned to cannabis, it was for the health benefits more than wanting to get stoned. The former collegiate athlete had undergone multiple hip surgeries, and was seeking an alternative from the opiates doctors had prescribed, so she began to explore how medical cannabis could treat her pain.

Fast forward a few years later, the Sonoma, California, resident was running a hundred million dollar global business and feeling stressed out. Traveling internationally constantly for work, she was also launching a wine brand, Gore Vineyards, with her husband, Tom Gore.

"I was just really miserable at the end of the day," Gore remembers. "I started turning back to cannabis to help me sleep, because if I could get a good night's sleep, I realized I was a lot better person."

Working in the wine industry, she was also exhausted by alcohol, she says, so she began experimenting with cannabis as a lifestyle product.

"I just needed a little bit to take the edge off of my hard day or conference call or getting ready for the birthday party the next day — all the things we deal with as professional women," explains the 34-year-old.

Over "high holiday" baking parties with friends, she realized most of the women she knew were struggling with these same issues of work-life balance. Could cannabis relieve the insane pressure on women to "have it all"?

In 2016, Gore launched The Garden Society, a medical cannabis company specializing in low dose edibles for women. Together with Michelin-starred chefs and a medical advisor, the entrepreneur and her team create confections for sale at dispensaries and through delivery services in California, in accordance with state medical marijuana laws. They also partner with brands to host dinner parties and recently participated in a wedding expo for brides interested in cannabis confections at their reception.

Why edibles? Gore says the women she surveyed said they felt more comfortable with consuming cannabis in a more discreet form — rather than have their kid catch them smoking a joint, as she put it. Keeping the dosage low is a priority for Gore, because so many newbies to the drug take it in too high quantities — and if you've ever eaten a weed brownie and not been able to move for multiple hours, you get it.

Each product sources strain-specific cannabis to target a specific ailment. Bright Blooms, fruit and herb gelee's baked with a hybrid Sativa plant, help provide "a mindful moment of focus," while milk chocolate candy Bliss Blossoms use a mellow Indica hybrid, with a 1:1 THC to CBD serve as a relaxant and a sleep aid. "If dosed correctly, our products will provide a pleasant and mild effect," says Gore. "We are looking to help women with busy lives take a moment to step away from those daily stressors."

Gore's plans to expand the company's offerings depend upon the upcoming law: While recreational use of cannabis has been legal in California since Prop 64 passed last November, allowing residents to possess, consume and even grow the plant, it won't be approved for commercial sale until 2018. "We really believe in the wellness benefits of this plant," Gore says. "We're just really excited for the possibilities for introducing cannabis to the broader adult population as these regulations roll out next year."

have to first understand the plant. The cannabis plant has more than 100 chemical receptors, known as cannabinoids. Tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC, is actually the only one that's psychoactive, aka, gets you high. The second best-known is called cannabidiol, or CBD, which is non-psychoactive and can treat a number of conditions, from anxiety to epilepsy to chronic pain.

Pamela Hadfield is the co-founder of HelloMD, the largest digital platform for medical cannabis. Hadfield, who had worked in startups for years, was inspired to launch HelloMD after experiencing how medical cannabis relieved her struggles with chronic migraines.

Hadfield says she constantly popped vicodin to deal with her symptoms. The San Francisco resident started taking cannabis three times a day, every day, in the form of a high CBD,

New research on cannabis and opioids

HelloMD teamed up with UC Berkeley to conduct a landmark study on cannabis as a substitute for opioids. Published in June in the journal Cannabis and Cannabinoid Research, the study culled survey data from over 3,000 HelloMD patients on how using cannabis affected their opioid use. Among the key findings: 97 percent of patients said that "strongly agreed/agreed" that they could decrease their opioid use when using cannabis; 92 percent said they preferred it over opiates to treat their condition and 81 percent agreed that "cannabis by itself was more effective than taking cannabis with opioids."

low-THC-ratio tincture (a liquid extract you can drop under the tongue), and she hasn't had a migraine in three years.

She and her husband, Mark Hadfield, launched HelloMD in 2014 to help others find relief for their own conditions through cannabis. The service, currently available in California and as of July, New York, connects patients with doctors via live video chat, in which they can privately discuss their medical condition and why cannabis might be an option for them. After the consultation, patients can get recommended for a medical marijuana ID card, which they can then bring to a doctor who's licensed to prescribe to them in their state.

"It's health and wellness," says Hadfield. "I don't think of [cannabis] as medical and I don't think of it as recreational. I think about my own story of, how did I get to a point of health and wellness? We feel like we can help people get on that path."

THE BIG RETIREMENT

Patriots great Vince Wilfork announced his retirement from the NFL in the best possible way for a man of his size — a retirement video which coupled as a commercial for baby back ribs BBQ. Big Vince tweeted on Monday, "Well y'all — it's been a great run, but the time has come. @Kingsford," and below was a vid of him dancing by a grill wearing no shirt and blue overalls.

Wilfork is set to hold a "farewell tailgate" before the Pats' regular-season opener on Thursday, Sept. 7 at Gillette.

Expect Wilfork to now be in every Dunkin' Donuts, Papa Gino's, Hooters of Saugus and Kelly's Roast Beef ad you see over the course of the next decade. Jolly, 350-pound former football players make perfect pitch men.

COO COO CUTLERS

Jay Cutler, who owns a face you'd love to give a Randy Savage-style elbow drop to, is back in the NFL.

He'll be the starting QB for the Miami Dolphins and will face the Pats twice this season, which is more exciting news for Pats fans.

Cutler is something of an internet sensation for not only the old "Smokin' Jay Cutler" deal, but also the fact that he and his wife, Kristin Cavallari, are against vaccines. Cutler and his E-list actress bride do not vaccinate their children because they're afraid it causes autism. Never mind the fact that if too many people believe what the Cutler's do, then we could soon welcome back measles, mumps and friggin' polio into our society.

Make no mistake, this is worse than Kyrie Irving believing the world is flat. This crap affects the human race.

Bust out the bats: The Red Sox are red hot at the plate of late

It took four months, but the Red Sox are finally clobbering the baseball. In their six-game winning streak, the Sox have scored 40 runs, an average of 6.66 runs per game. Here is a look at the hottest Red Sox over the past seven days. MATT BURKE
